

The Swedish House of Finance (SHoF) offers within its Doctoral Course Program in Finance a mini-course

Financing Startups

with

Professor David T. Robinson (Duke)

This course examines how new businesses are financed. We begin by asking what factors are associated with the choice to become self-employed. In some sense, this focuses our attention on the demand-side of the capital market for new firms. Then we turn to the supply side and study the role of banks, venture capital and other capital providers in the formation of new businesses. (Reading list)

The course is tightly integrated with this year's SIFR conference. (Preliminary conference program) All course participants are encouraged to attend the SIFR conference, and the conference materials will form part of the grading for the course.
