Science and the quest for knowledge never sleep.

As the spring - filled with challenges we are still grasping to understand - turns into summer, we would like to wrap up and send you off with some read into the well deserved summer break. Like many of you, we too have moved our operations digital. Our output and collaboration with the financial sector have been very intense with an even broader reach. We would also like to take the opportunity to thank you for your continuous engagement with the Swedish House of Finance.

The upcoming fall will focus on Consumer Finance and Sustainable Finance, with two top tier conferences targeting these topics. We will also continue our webinar and podcast series. Look out for the events in your mailbox.

Happy summer!

Sustainable Finance

There already exists a lot of research surrounding sustainability. What is special about sustainable finance? Without the understanding of the financial system, for example products, evaluations, ownership, or financial crises, it is difficult to analyze implications for sustainability.

Missed our Webinar Series?

As countries around the world implemented policies to contain COVID-19, many businesses faced unprecedented losses of revenue. Stock markets dropped, and credit markets seized up in late March. Our researchers together with guests from the industry address the impact of COVID-19 on different parts of the financial ecosystem in our "Now Casting" webinar series.

About Us

The Swedish House of Finance at the Stockholm School of Economics is Sweden's national research center for financial economics. It hosts internationally distinguished researchers, and enables financial research and development of the highest quality.

The center serves as an independent platform where academia and both the private and public financial sectors can exchange knowledge, foster new ideas and gain access to a global network of the most prominent researchers in finance.

The Swedish House of Finance is an equally private and government funded, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization. It hosts approximately 70 researchers, consisting of resident and affiliated professors as well as PhD students.
