

Newsletter December 2023

This year, amid a global landscape of geopolitical tensions, natural disasters and rising costs, central banks continued raising interest rates, impacting both financial institutions and households. Meanwhile, policymakers remained focused on climate concerns, actively exploring strategies to protect the Earth's climate.

In our year-end newsletter, the Swedish House of Finance picks lectures, interviews, and featured articles from the last months that address the most pressuring issues of 2023

“

Many thanks to all our stakeholders, collaborators and supporters for participating in another year of financial research, dialogue, and discovery.”

— BO BECKER, Director, Swedish House of Finance

Read

- Why is the Swedish Krona so Weak?
- Household Risks in Times of Financial Stress
- Causes and Consequences of Shrinking Stock Markets
- The Retail Investment Boom and the Cost of Trading Small Stocks
- Are Recessions a Good Time to Start a Business?
- Review of Sweden's Macroprudential Regulations
- ESG Challenges among Venture Capitalists and Entrepreneurs

More research highlights

Watch

- Measuring and Mitigating Geopolitical Risks
- How do Crisis Experiences Affect Beliefs and Decision-Making?
- A Conversation on Impact Investing
- What is ahead for the private equity industry?
- What does market power look like in a data-rich, digital economy?

All videos

About SHoF

The Swedish House of Finance (SHoF) at the Stockholm School of Economics is Sweden's national research center for financial economics.

SHoF is an equally private and government funded, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization. It hosts approximately 40 resident research fellows with research assistants, as well as around 30 PhD students in finance.

Sweden's national research center in financial economics

SWEDISH HOUSE OF FINANCE

Bertil Ohlins gata 4, 113 50 Stockholm

You're receiving this email because you have agreed to receive information about Swedish House of Finance's new research and policy seminars and conferences, under the conditions of the Stockholm School of Economics' privacy policy.

UNSUBSCRIBE | PRIVACY POLICY